Justices of the Peace were a key element of local government in Elizabethan England. They were a voluntary position, however, it was a great honour to serve.